To Whom It May Concern,

I am not a landholder but I am an interested and informed casual observer with many friends who are farmers.

I strongly oppose any changes to the current vegetation management laws imposed by the LNP. Farmers care more about their land than anyone, but they are continually demonised by green groups as simply tree-killing reef destroyers and this is wrong.

I am dead against any imposition of more red tape on farmers who want to undertake simple tree clearing or other works that could improve their farms' viability in what is an exceedingly tough economic climate.

In fact, I believe they should have more freedom to conduct their business free from such heavy-handed government intervention.

Yours faithfully,

Julian Tomlinson
