I don't believe individuals who hold a weapons license should be penalised for something a family member may do. This is straight out discrimination and abuse of rights to the individual who holds a licence who has followed the law and done nothing wrong except be related to someone who has chosen to commit something illegal. No one should be held accountable for someone else's actions they have no control of and risk losing their weapons licence based on being related to someone who has done something illegal. That's saying that the individual who has been law abiding is at fault for someone who they have no control over. It's discrimination at its best it's basically accusing someone who has obtained their weapons licence lawfully whose been deemed to be a fit and proper person that they won't follow the law regarding not allowing weapons to be accessed by those who aren't licensed. No way those who legally have a weapons license and follow the law should be held accountable for someone else's mistakes and actions. What's next a law abiding citizen gets arrested and put in jail because someone they happen to be related to commits a criminal offence. This is ludicrous and needs to be seen for what it is.
