witnessing first hand the effects domestic violence has had on my mother predominantly, i can already see that the new ppd isn't going to be benefiting the survivors of these issues, police in queensland are trained to handle situations, but not to this calibre, this is just a way for the work to be null and voided by them, getting rid of the actual work at hand they need to do, police do not have enough training to be able to determine who is in the wrong and who is in the right at a call they are attending too. My mother was failed by a system that says they are there to protect and failed by the police that were there to 'help', to allow a blame game by the police you are allowing a maybe biased mindset to decide the fate of a victim, and for you to say in the bill that it protects the workload of sworn officers who serve and protect is cruel and diminishing those who have been through the trauma. The original ddo court system needs to remain in place as this is what is actually helping those in need of it, and putting that jurisdiction into police hands is the going to make things worse
