Dear Committee Members,

I am writing to advocate for the preservation of choice in homeschooling education. As both a homeschooling parent and a qualified teacher, I strongly believe that parents should have the freedom to choose the educational approach that best suits their children's needs.

Homeschooling offers a diverse array of learning opportunities that extend beyond the confines of a set curriculum. As a homeschooling parent, I have witnessed firsthand the benefits of tailoring education to fit the unique interests, strengths, and learning styles of individual children.

Forcing homeschooling families to adhere strictly to a predetermined curriculum would limit their ability to provide a customised and effective education for their children. It is essential to recognise that there are many ways to learn, and the flexibility afforded by homeschooling allows for creativity and innovation in education.

I urge you to respect the choices of homeschooling parents and to refrain from imposing unnecessary restrictions on their educational practices. Let us work together to ensure that all children have access to diverse and personalised learning experiences that enable them to reach their full potential.

Thank you for considering my perspective on this important issue.

Sincerely,

[REDACTED]

Bundaberg
