Dear Committee Members,

I am writing to advocate for reconsidering homeschooling regulations in light of the growing number of families choosing this option. It's clear that many parents feel traditional schooling and the Australian curriculum don't align with their values, prompting them to homeschool.

Rather than enforcing the curriculum on homeschooling families, let's focus on examining school systems and the curriculum itself. We, as parents, know our children best and strive to do what's best for them. History shows that forcing solutions doesn't work.

Instead, let's work together to create a more flexible and responsive education system that benefits all students, whether they're in traditional schools or homeschooling. I urge you to prioritise collaboration with homeschooling families to find constructive solutions.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely, Lucy
