Submitter Comments:

Parents homeschool their children to give them a better education than is available in any school because it is like having a private tutor. The education can be shaped by the students interests at that time. Many children are home schooled for primary only, and then attend a high school. They are usually ahead of their peers. NAPLAN results for homeschoolers are generally slightly higher than state averages. There is no issue with homeschooling that needs to be fixed. If the state imposes a curriculum on home schoolers, then the focus moves away from literacy and numeracy, to include elements of indoctrination of woke agenda. It's a desperate act by the government to try to control children's way of thinking, If the government imposes a mandatory curriculum for Home Schoolers, then they need to provide funding for their education at home by way of subsidies paid to the parent doing the home schooling.
