Submitter Comments:

Dear Committee Members, I am writing to share the positive impact of homeschooling on my child and express my opposition to the proposed imposition of the Australian Curriculum on home educating families. Homeschooling has been specifically tailored to my child, incorporating his interests, talents, and abilities. This individualised approach has allowed him to develop a genuine love for learning and focus on areas that will benefit him in his future endeavours and career. I firmly believe that pushing the rigid and limiting Australian Curriculum onto home educating families would undermine the very essence of homeschooling. It would restrict our ability to personalise our children's education and stifle their potential for growth and success. As a dedicated homeschooling parent, I urge the committee to recognise the value of individualised learning and to refrain from imposing unnecessary constraints on home educating families. Let us continue to nurture our children's passions and talents, providing them with the best possible education tailored to their unique needs and aspirations. Thank you for considering my perspective.
