To whom it may concern, As a concerned grandparent of two home-schooled children, I completely disagree with the changes proposed by Di Farmer in relation to home-schooling. In my experience and as many statistics show, home-schooling children regularly out perform children in mainstream schools and are more well adjusted in their lives outside of education. Taking away the freedom of others to learn in a way best suited to them, due to a single case of a child being mistreated and taking their own life, while ignoring all those who are suffering in mainstream schooling, is abuse of power and a disgrace to the memory of the poor child who took their life.
