Being able to home-school is a parents right to connect and teach in a way that best suits their child. We know our children best and should be able to teach them material that best connects with their personality and interests. Mainstream schooling is failing our children in every way, and there has been no improvement in the last decade. It isn't home-schooling that needs changing, it's your lack of teaching in main schools that needs a revamp. If it was working, there would have been no need for parents to pull their kids out. Your curriculum is boring and for the most part irrelevant. The changes proposed is an overreach of parents ability to make decisions to the best interests for there children. One system does not fit all.
