I was homeschooled without Australian Curriculum. I am an Estimator in construction (remediation) and have studied at both Tafe and University. I started university at 14 years old completing a course with a High Distinction. Since then I have studied both at Tafe and university and have completed a Diploma in multimedia and Diploma in project management as well as studying photography, politics, law, psychology and sociology at university. The main problem I see with curriculum based learning is that it only teaches students what to learn rather than how to learn. Also by forcing students to learn set materials it can make them reluctant to further their learning or education.
