Home schooling is another way to teach a child more efficiently than school. Every parent has the freedom to choose what is best for their child and has the right to choose this without interference from a third party. School only supports one type of learner and has a one size fits all mentality. It's based on tests and puts pressure on students and in my opinion hinders a person rather than helps them because if you are a visual and practical learner you will never feel intelligent due to how the system is designed. The majority of adults I know think most of their primary and high school was only practical for the reading writing and maths and the rest of it was subjective and a lot a complete waste of time. Schools need to change entirely and parents have a right to decide to home school if they feel their children are not enjoying school or if it's damaging them in some way psychologically.

How about focusing on bringing living costs down and helping out the people who pay for absolutely everything you do? I am definitely NOT in favour of governments sticking their nose into business that's not theirs. A parent obviously cares about their child if they are going to the effort of teaching them themselves and that's all you should be concerned about.
