I do not agree with any further restrictions in the way of legislation, to make it more difficult even slightly for a parent/guardian to home school their child. It is simply difficult enough to be a parent in this current climate of government overreach. Let alone making it extra hoops to have to jump through, as it is my opinion that the parents who wish to abuse this right to home school are in the extreme minority. And providing extra assistance services (which is the main purpose of government), is a much better approach.
