My name is [REDACTED] and I am a 13yo homeschooler. I disagree with the changes to the education bill 2024, because I enjoy the way we currently homeschool and I would like to continue learning through my interests. I struggle with reading and writing and doing maths because of my learning difficulties and I have no interest in the curriculum but to have alot of interest in things that I can see are beneficial to my goals in life and are practical to me. But I do know lots about horses, dogs and how to train them and all about their history, biology and psychology of these. I have ambitions to become a horse-riding teacher and trainer and also do equine therapy to help people with their disabilities. NOTE: [REDACTED] has severe anxiety, autism and learning difficulties, she attended prep , 8 months before her homeschooling journey began as school did not support her style of learning or her need for extra help. Formal learning causes great distress for her. She is improving her learning of maths, English and reading by doing Pony club manuals/certificates, reading books about training horses and dogs. She is a visual and hands on learner.
