Parents should be able to choose a curriculum that works for their child(ren). The National Curriculum is designed for large classrooms of children, not for a personalized teaching environment such as the homeschooling environment. The current registration and reporting system for homeschooling is working very well, so there is need to change it. Rather than making things more prescriptive for homeschooling families, perhaps the Government should conduct a review of the school system in order to find out why so many students are choosing to leave it. Education whether it be in schools or homeschooling should provide quality education that children need in order to be successful in adulthood in business or their chosen career path. It should not become a place to push woke ideologies onto young minds. These topics of discussion should take place within families and have no place in the education system.
