Submitter Comments:

I am writing to add my comments as someone who was homeschooled her whole life, who didn't and couldn't fit in with the standard government curriculum and now desire to homeschool my children, one of which is autistic and desires to do school at home due to his struggles at school. The idea that once again the government think they know best, that children should fit into their box despite the overwhelming evidence that shows how homeschooled children thrive when outside the classroom and their learning is created to fit them individually and their learning process. A parents responsibility is to know their child how they learn best and therefore choose a curriculum best for their individual child's needs and something that works with their lifestyle. Parents will not accept this control and conforming and will continue to go underground even more if you go ahead with forcing a failing system and curriculum on all families, regardless of what their valid reasons to move away from a standard system in the school..
