At the heart of the current attempt at regulating home schooling is the issue of control. The education system in this country has been in a state of disrepair for decades and consequently we have seen a continual drift towards home based education. The government - rather than addressing the issues, is now seeking to interfere in the right every parent has to choose what is best for their child and effectively punish them - and more importantly, seek to control what students are being taught privately, since it is a direct threat to the propaganda they implement through the school system. They do this in the knowledge that the drift toward home schooling is no longer just a trickle and there is a very real risk of an entire generation of Australians taking their place in society without any of the points of reference government requires of them for manipulation. In short - home schooling is poised to scupper the Orwellian dystopia favoured by left leaning governments at state and federal level - and since it is already far too late to stop it, they seek to dilute it by forcing parents to adhere to the very curricula they sought to escape from in the first place.
