I currently homeschool both my sons who have disabilities and need tailored one on one support that their local high school could not give them that's why I opted to pull my children out and start our home school journey, I have seen a massive difference in both my sons behaviours and the fact that they are wanting to learn and do their work. I feel as parents we can best guide our children as not like school we can give them the learning tools they need to become more independent and capable learners. I feel this new legislation is to much on parents and children and will not be in best interests of their learning and to much responsibility on parents. I pulled my children out of high school because they were miserable following the one size fits all curriculum. Home schooling means children can focus on learning their way that interests them to make it enjoyable and fun not all text books and tests. I feel this bill is utterly unnecessary and protocols in place are already well established. I strongly oppose the proposed changes to home education and I hope the bill does not get passed.
