I am a long time homeschool Mum. I first homeschooled my now adult daughter through distance education using the Australian curriculum. Considering she has ADHD, this was extremely challenging and unrewarding for us as a family. I now homeschool my youngest daughter who is diagnosed dyslexic and ADHD. Due to the extreme challenges we faced homeschooling my other daughter, I chose to work with my youngest differently and set our own individual goals and plans through the home education dept. She is excelling in all areas of life, where my other daughter struggled incredibly using the Australian curriculum, that ultimately affected her mental and emotional health negatively. The current registration and system is working well. Why fix something that is not broken?
