I do do NOT agree with the proposed changes to homeschooling in Queensland. We don't want to use the national curriculum because one of the wonderful things about homeschool is the flexibility to tailor the learning to your child's needs, the current environment- eg. if on holidays we go to the museums and various points of interest for school, and in being able to do that fosters the love for learning that we all need to be able to end up studying for the careers that we have. Also not every child or person learns the same way, so in being able to tailor the home education means that I am able to present the learning to my 3 children in the 3 different ways that means that they get the most from their schooling. Especially for children on the autism spectrum home schooling is a safe haven where children can learn with the schooling tailored to their needs, away from the distractions and often dis-regulating environment of the standard school classroom.
