Submitter Comments:

The current Australian curriculum does not accommodate for all children and is certainly lacking in any subject matter that will prepare our children for the 21st century. It's a generic, broad brush approach and doesn't allow for extended work within a children's area of strength. Compared to other nations, our curriculum is rather poor and families should have the choice to implement a curriculum that is beneficial for their child's education rather than a one size fits all approach. We live in a democratic society and that should include a choice in how we educate our children.
