Submitter Comments:

My son [REDACTED] is 5 years of age. From 18months I have been exposing [REDACTED] to homeschooling education and mostly followed the Montessori philosophy. [REDACTED] has been been a high achiever and thoroughly enjoyed learning this way. Last year [REDACTED] was exposed to the Australian curriculum in a school setting and to say the least, his interest waned. The work he was exposed to was far below his education level. The restrictive process of the class environment did not foster the exploration he is exposed to whilst homeschooled. We are a family that travels internationally regularly therefore homeschooling offers [REDACTED] stability in his education, tailored specifically to his needs. Our financial and time investment into our sons education is greater than any institution is able to provide. I do hope you reconsider your direction of choice and understand that not everyone fits in to the same box. Kind regards [REDACTED]
