Good morning,

I do not want to use the entire national curriculum for schooling. As some of the things being classes as subjects do not focus on the reality of life and what a child needs to develop skills needed to create the best self as they grow in this ever changing world we live in.

Many children slip through the so called public school system still without the knowledge needed to jump through the levels of achievement.

Homeschooling parents chose to homeschool or physically need to homeschool to protect the well being of our children. We take on the everchanging challenges but we are not and do not claim to be teachers. If we need to be certified teachers to do this task we also should be getting paid by the government teacher wages instead of few hundred dollar per year given to us.

The changes in my children when the pressure of attending public school was removed allowed them to express themselves and develop better social and mental health improved so much.

The social experience of public schools is not an ideal situation for students that need a quieter space to learn without being overstimulated by excessive noise, human interaction, bullying, physical abuse.

We have been doing life better by homeschooling. We have been learning things our way with the assistance of many different avenues. Some resources are also used by the public school systems so we blend our lessons. We include learning life skills needed to become knowledgeable of life so focus on food, hygiene, self awareness, social standards are considered part of life.

The new way of schooling blending of subjects like Discovery was maths and science, Gem was English and global enterprise and media being used in used from year 7-10. Then changing to Year 11 the subject change to be compliant with national levels. Changing the whole concept of learning therefore creating yet another challenge for so called accepted standards.

Kind regards
Di Bartels Wilson
