Hello,

I'm just quickly sending a short submission, as I only just heard about the proposed changes to home education.

I home educated both of my daughters, who are now adults. I'm glad I homeschooled and know it was best for them.

I was a single parent and found the hoop jumping, after becoming registered, a strain that didn't benefit their education at all.

Rather than making things even more difficult and painful for those providing this education to the children, I would like to see the home education experience enhanced with positive input from the Education Department. Resources, group excursions and activities. A friendly, helpful supportive service that benefits the education of homeschooled children, rather than the hostile attitude towards home educating parents and the punishing, excruciating documents that take precious time away from the children.

Sorry this is rushed. Thank you for taking the time to read it.
