According to the Word of God (the Holy Bible) Prostitution is clearly against the 7th Commandment "Thou shalt not commit Adultery". It is also clear from the Word of God that any sexual activity outside marriage (i.e. marriage between one man and one woman) is seen by God to be 'unclean' and that God will eternally (and even at times pre-eternally) judge and punish all those that do not sincerely repent in the name of Jesus Christ of such wickedness. Any person in authority in the Civil Magistrate that either would be promoting or condoning in any way the acts of fornication or adultery would be derelict in their duties to the keeping of this Law of God (i.e. the 7th Commandment) and will be held responsible by God for their failure of duty not to condemn this as a crime against God and our society. Any reasonably thinking person can see that there are absolutely no benefits to our society with respect to Women or Men engaging in such so-called 'work' (other than perhaps money in their own pockets). People are naive to believe that such wickedness done behind closed doors will not impact the rest of society. There are no winners here. Think of the grief in families when wives or husbands or partners find out that their spouse or partner have cheated on them. Think of the entailing cost this brings on the whole community - arguments within families - cost of marriage guidance Counsellors - the involvement of Police to settle disputes or often domestic violence - tax rates to pay for Police caught up in these things - court cases to settle divorce arrangements - children displaced etc etc etc — All because of the ease of access and the temptation that this so-called 'industry' entails for men particularly (but no doubt for women also) to these so-called 'services'. If women (and perhaps men) were not offering themselves for such wickedness in the first place - then there would not be the issue of having to legislate to 'keep them safe'
