Dear Sir/Madam

I write in support of the unborn.

I don't believe this can be a debate about choice or rights, to me it can only be about; when is a person, a person.

Anyone who is dependent on another, whether they are a baby, small child, disabled or even the elderly require help for fundamental survival. If that help is withdrawn wilfully or by neglect the person will most likely perish. If we as a nation hold values such that we care for people who cannot care for themselves, then this surely must also be true for unborn babies. If mothers neglect there new born, they die and if this happens they are charged under law with various offences. The same applies for anyone in a dependant state which should only naturally include unborn babies.

The only question is; when is an unborn baby a human being. At what point in gestation does a human form start? Answer that and then you will know at what stage a pregnancy can be terminated without it resulting in the death of a person and therefore not guilty of unlawful act.

Regards

Shane
