The fact that a bill has been in existence since 1899 does not make it antiquated; it means it works. The law, "Thou shalt not murder" has been in existence since 1500BC and still stands the test of time. Mr. Pyne says that society is changing and that the law should change with it. That assumes that the changes in society are for the better. In my opinion society is not changing for the better, but is following the path of all civilizations that have arisen and then gone into decline and fall. If we allow a convenience abortion right up until term, the logical next step will be to legislate in favour of infanticide. I am opposed to the passage of this bill.
