To whom this may concern

It's so easy, isn't it, to kill something you have never seen, never met, never come to know and love. Ah, there's the rub. A baby is dug out of the rubble in Aleppo and everyone heaves a sigh of relief, sheds tears and cheers. A LIFE has been saved—rescued to live in a war-torn country with no water, food or hope for the future. A few months earlier and the death (via abortion) of that same child would have meant nothing to anyone though the mother might carry the scar for life. The baby certainly won't because he/she is dead. In all eyes except God's, he/she never existed. The day will come however when the "Judge of all the earth" will seek recompense for those murdered souls. Sure, life can be tough. Strange it is the western women with all of their wealth and welfare who are leading the abortion rate and those women who can least afford to have the children and provide for them a loving, safe and secure environment are still doing so. It is a blight on our conscience and a stain on histories' page that has to be erased, not enhanced. Shame on anyone who promotes abortion. Playing God is not part of man's dominion. Promoting abortion makes one just as guilty as actually carrying out the act. Think about what you are doing and stop doing it.

I have signed the petition and added these few words.
