I am emailing to let you know that I, along with my family, am in agreement with the idea that any advertisement in public spaces should be 'G' rated.

Children should not be confronted with sexual advertising. But I also think that neither should adults have to be. I am uncomfortable with it (I'm in my 30s), and I'm sure that a lot of the older generations would also find it uncomfortable.

I also believe that sexual advertising sends the wrong kinds of messages to consumers - for example, women are often depicted as sexual objects.

So please find that a Bill should be passed to ensure that outdoor advertising not be sexually explicit or inappropriate for children.

Vivienne Corney.
