Submitter Comments:

As all life is sacred and therefore valuable. To think a baby could be born alive without common rights of care, is being less than human. Surely compassion is the way of Australian society. If a child is born in a normal delivery every effort would be made to prolong and save that little life. Can the Australian government, medical professionals and the public, think this is the way forward. One day it maybe the very people who propose this bill, on the other end when their life is expendable. To be treated as refuse to be thrown on the dump.
