Every viable child is a human being with a right to life, just as you or I have, and so the potential for a live birth following a later term abortion, with the child being left alone to die either in the abortion clinic or in some waste bin is more than abhorrent. The aim of providing appropriate medical care and attention to all newborns is in line with New South Wales and South Australian legislation and in accordance with international human rights standards, and it is our very strong opinion is that these persons, these babies, deserve a legislative right to care, and to be treated equally like all other newborns.
