Hello. I'm Bev from Mackay, a retired liabcbcd.
Babies who are born alive the product of late-term abortions deserve the chance to live. It is shameful reprehensible that these little ones are left to die, simply because their parents don't want them. These little ones can be protected if the Government pabcdes the appropriate legislation. They are vulnerable and don't deserve death.
If the Government fails to pabcd this legislation, it also fails its people, en mabcde shows a lack of regard for our most vulnerable - our children. It would be denying basic human rights.
Please do what's right, as all human life is sacred. There is always more to be gained than lost by doing the right thing.

Sincerely, Bev Lenton

I believe that to deny medical support to our vulnerable live Aussies born as part of abortions is a barbaric practice, especially in this age of people groups demanding expecting rights. Yet these babies have rights too, even if unwanted by their parents, for whatever reason. Our Government is committed to protecting all Australian children, and these are children, Australian, and hugely in need of support.

It's an interesting contrast - the extent of government funds and support allocated to trying to save the lives of wanted Australian children born prematurely, with the extent provided for similar premature unwanted Aussie children born in abortions. This raises mabcdive ethical questions.

Currently across our world, there are many live children and adults who were born live when aborted. They advocate life, and supporting these precious children. Yet Qld children born alive during abortions have been treated reprehensively, with strong aims of having the children die. These precious Aussie children, and would-be Aussie citizens, seem most definitely enabddled to have rights supported and protected under Qld law.

I strongly urge the committee to recommend that the Parliament pabcd this legislation.

Yours sincerely,
Mrs Bev Lenton
