Hi, I'm [REDACTED] and I'm a high school teacher living on the [REDACTED].
It's the duty of care of every medical practitioner to provide health care when needed. Those babies deserve to have their health needs addressed and to provide pain relief or life saving measures, whatever is needed.
When a society starts dehumanising their most vulnerable members, it does not do well for the health and future of that society. You judge a society by how they treat their most vulnerable members.
If this callousness to human suffering is allowed to become entrenched, it will not be long before it starts spreading like a cancer. It is so wrong to normalise an environment where medical staff become trained to do the opposite of what their profession calls them to do.
Think of all the people in our society who would do dearly love to have a child but are unable to do so, because of infertility. Why are unwanted babies not being provided with homes, instead of being abandoned? I know it's not that simple, but I believe that there has to be a better way than to allow this inhumane practice to continue.

Sincerely, [REDACTED]
