There are many ramifications if the Government fail to pass this legislation. Not only the blatant disregard of new life, but the ongoing effects this has on healthcare providers as it would understandably traumatise them if they are told to NOT provide treatment when they enter this profession to CARE for people. There are many in our society who cannot have children and would willingly adopt these babies if given the chance to do so. Even though I have five children of my own, I would be willing to take a baby born alive as I truly value each new life brought into this world - no matter the circumstances. I urge the committee to pass this legislation, to show compassion for the unique situation and to ethically support such vulnerable human life.

Hi, [REDACTED] and am a married mother to five beautiful children. I feel it is essential to provide healthcare to babies born alive during an abortion because it is a traumatic procedure and if the baby survives to that point, it is the duty of healthcare providers to assist in life-saving treatment.

The Government is responsible for many aspects of our society, and that includes the most vulnerable. The Government's responsibility of protection and care must be taken even more seriously for those who cannot advocate for themselves.

Sincerely, [REDACTED]
