For years now I have wanted to have the choice of how my life should end, basically with as little pain as possible, that I may die with dignity, and that everyone else should have the same right. I see voluntary assisted dying as crucial to these things coming about.

I, like others, do not want to end my life at the moment as it is rich and rewarding at present and I am not suffering, but it may not always be so.

With professional medical assistance I would not have to resort to the fearful prospect of trying to find ways to end my life that would be much less dignified and with the possibility of it not being carried out successfully. To be in the hands of professional medical people is what I would wish for myself and others.

There is overwhelming public support for assisted dying laws. Will you respect our wishes?

Yours sincerely,
Lynne Hume
