Submitter Comments:

It's really just a decision of empathy and compassion. I want a Voluntary Assisted Dying Law . It's right and it's just.

If someone doesn't want it for them self, then they don't have to use it. However, they have no right denying others the choice of a quick and peaceful end.

I have a chronic lung condition and as of now, I am not in pain but I reserve the right to end my life with the assistance of a kind medical practitioner,if I get to a stage of agony .

I understand that in reputable poll after poll the results show that more than 80% want this humane law. Let's hope the politicians listen to their constituents who put them in power to work for them. it should have been a plebiscite throughout Australia and with no darn politicians pushing their own agendas, however here we are.

I just hope that compassion and empathy win the day.
