Just because you can do something that can supposedly alleviate the problem of palliative care, does not make it the right thing to do. The QLD Labor govt choice of legally allowing people to choose to die by taking something that will take away their pain, or even kill them before pain sets in, is not right. Stop spending millions on making it easier for people of all ages and various stages of less than perfect health to suicide. You will value human life by telling the people of QLD that you are contributing generously to the palliative care sector. What you are telling me and my family is that it is financially better for the government that you take your own life rather than seek palliative care. What you are telling me is that everyone will have to consider death by prescription as it will be mandated as a viable option. Yet at the same time you are trying to cut back suicide numbers. Or are you? Is everything a ruse? Lockdowns to protect the elderly yet you isolate those dying from their own immediate families. Abortion, euthanasia, so many thousands more human lives killed due to your implemented laws. A culture of death in sunny Queensland. Beautiful one day, deadly the next. We can see what you are doing and we are not falling for your smoke and mirrors ways.
