May I ask a question? If voluntary-assisted dying was legal 100+ years ago, where do you think our health system would be now? Would the remarkable progress of medicine in that time be achieved, or would the pressures of funding on governments and the human tendency for taking the easy option always ensure that it was cheaper to go the euthanasia option, rather than invest money in research? We are the beneficiaries of a nation that valued all life, from conception to natural death, and yet we think we know better than they about suffering. Lord, what fools these mortals be!
