Voluntary assisted dying has finally been accepted in nearly all the states in Australia and as usual QLD is lagging behind. For the Politicians which still havent made a decision think about it this way, imagine a patient that is dying slowly with stage 4 cancer and is in great pain plus not being able to eat or drink much because of the continued pain and sickness and in some cases vomiting. Please have some compassion for these people if they wish to terminate their lives for these reasons. If you were in that position wouldnt you like to have that option if available rather than just being half alive lying in a bed feeling terrible every day of your illness and knowing you are going to die, without being able to go anywhere, do anything and basically just relying on others for support to get through each horrible day. Please have some empathy and make a decision allowing those that want to die the freedom to do so.
