Lowering the tax on legal tobacco will ensure the end of the illegal tobacco. The failure of the government to ensure the cost of living is not based upon the rorts of organisations to increase the cost of living (real estates equate to organised crime groups by rorting the lack of accountability for their incessant needs of making more money which equates to higher prices of living because the higher prices people are required to pay in an area determines the average prices of cost of living in the area). By removing the enormous taxes on legal tobacco people will purchase it as preferred rather than the illegal tobacco. Enforcement of purchase laws similar to alcohol would curb the youth buying it. It's not rocket science really
