Dear Sir,

With reference to the notice in the Warwick Daily News, September 17th 2005, I wish to take the liberty of acquainting you with the enclosed information, which I realize that by now may be surpassed, but believe is still quite relevant.

The submission I would like to make is that with Bio-diesel having been tried and tested with seemingly very satisfactory results, why have we, as a nation, reached such a critical situation regarding supplies & costs when this information has been around for so long.

As you can see, a colleague of mine, a strong supporter of the National Party, attempted to generate some interest in the value of Bio-diesel in 2001 but without any obvious result.

I further submit that I believe no government of the day would be interested in attempting to reduce the cost of fuel because of the huge amount of G.S.T. that it is generating through its impact on just about everything we use in our daily lives.

Yours Sincerely

Deryck F. Hollington
