I know the state government is trying it's best to try and make it safe but these criminals don't care about the consequences because the penalties are not harsh enough to make them think before they act you can try all you like Evan this early intervention is not going to work because of the attitudes of the way they have learnt and taught that they think they are untouchable and the sentencing is a joke for the crime's they ware this like a badge that's why I firmly believe castle law is a big step in the the right direction it will teach these criminals boundaries the hard way their choice will have consequences. The biggest problem is there is no respect or boundaries anymore it's not taught at home in schools or genuinely anywhere and the biggest problem with that is it's about 30 years of no real education of respect and boundaries it's all about their rights and no accountability
