Although there has been recent improvement observed in Nambour, this does not detract from the reality that issues are ongoing with an increased presence of mental health and criminal matters. The optics are looking good for proposed amendments to law, as it will also allow citizens to feel more confident in their local governments and police. It will also allow private security organizations to work more effectively as reporting may hold more credibility when police have the power to make action. The current climate of no evidence didn't happen it needs to be abolished and police need to be able to move based on real-world intelligence. It is also very damaging for families businesses and the general public when offenders are allowed to continue wreaking havoc without consequences. It is time to get rid of meth once and for all. QPS need to start building more cases against suppliers in the region and tackle the problem at the source.
