My view is there shouldn't be any categories at all, you're either safe with a firearm or you are not, end of story.

Have a background check to ensure you're not a criminal or dangerously mentally ill, issue the licence, no expiry, no categories.

If you do something wrong, you lose the licence, just like you do in the 5 or 10 year current licence periods in Queensland anyhow, so what's the difference?!

Stronger storage laws are sensible, helps stop the firearms being stolen.

Sound moderators should be available to all for the health and safety of all shooters.

Ex military service personnel should not have to go through the gun safety course since they have allready been trained to a much higher standard of weapons handling.

Police storage reports should not have details like locaton, type of safe, extra security measures, these are unnecessary details taken and stored on an unsecured database. If a report was done into how many firearms are stolen in the state and the thieves had uncanny knowledge of where the firearms were stored you would be surprised which points either to a hacker or someone in weapons licensing passing on these details to someone..
