As a licensed firearms owner, I have spent many years as a club member to various shooting clubs in qld, while I have done hunting in the past I primarily a club competition shooter, I participate in various pistol matches, cowboy action shooting, clay pigeon shooting, and various rifle shoots.

There are more people joining clubs and getting into the sport. There are young shooters, female shooters and senior citizens that are all club members.

Licensed firearms owners have passed the fit and proper person test, and generally have no criminal record and for the most part are law abiding citizens who uphold the law. As a shooter I feel the Bondi massacre was a horrendous act of terrorism that would not have happened if our government agencies shared information with each other. the fact that all the warning signs were there and the man was given a firearms license by the nsw police is horrendous. The actions of these men were absolutely appalling and un Australian. Since the Bondi attack, there has been nearly a dozen shootings in Australia, all of these shootings have been carried out by criminals with illegal weapons. These crimes are not committed by lawful firearms owners. No criminal is going to hand in their guns in a gun buyback, so why waste the money and punish law abiding citizens? The new laws put forward by the qld premier are targeting these criminals and people who mean to do harm to this country. The laws are fair and well thought out. The new reforms are to disarm and punish criminals and terrorists and commend David Crisafulli on the action that he and his party have taken. Premiers from other states should take a leaf out of your book and follow your example.
