When a bill introduced fundamentally requires a rewrite of the human rights act, there needs to be considerably more thought put into this process prior to it becoming law. The PM's rush to put through a bill that he believes he was elected on as "this is what qlders wanted" should be examined in further detail rather than rushed through. My family has been a victim of youth crime, murder, and I am opposed to this bill entirely in its current form. I have no doubt that the laws need to be reviewed, and a solution needs to be found but this is not the answer, and with the PM putting rehabilitation and support programs on his "to do list" this whole policy is ass about face. A class action suit will no doubt be the result of this policy, and personally i would be more than happy to see that happen to hold the premiers office accountable for pushing through a bill that even he did not publicise as being open for submission. This is the 21st century, and requires 21 century solutions. I am sure mr premier would be singing a completely different tune if it was one of his children facing a mandatory sentence. As PM, you are an abstract failure for QLD, an international disgrace in your blatant disregard for human rights. Find the solutions to the problems that cause the crime in the first place, but perhaps that does not follow the governments narrative. I am disgusted in the draconian philosophy being applied here and look forward to Mr C resigning his position at the end of his first term as promised. In addition, the reported crime figures being sprouted by Mr C somehow dont match the publicly released figures from ABS and also QPS. Sad to be a Queenslander.
