Historically, relative legislated Acts are only enforced by the Office of the Public Trustee, or individuals. Aside from the significant woeful efficiency, unaccountability, maladministration, excessive fees, poor communication and poor governance of the Public Trustee (and for that matter the Public Guardian), these entities seemingly often have some degree of financial vested interest.

Thus, the public is unable to have confidence in these entities, due to lack of transparency, inability of satisfactory and logical resolutions, alone. To pursue justice under the Acts, an individual requires a substantial amount of funds, as well as an impervious reserve of mental, emotional and psychological energies. There is a third option, which sadly I have endured, and worse still, is used successfully (again without any verification).....DISHONESTY Therefore, will THIS Act be enforced by the Government on behalf of the public using taxpayers funds, or, will it yet again be another legislated Act that effectively is of little real benefit to the community?
