I wish to express my disappointment at the proposed amendment to remove the ID requirement from the voting process.

Over the short time it has been a "requirement" we have found it no problem at all and in fact probably speeds up the voting process. the present practice seems to be fairly liberal and practically enforced and it does, without question stop, or at least minimise. the practice of multiple voting.

The desire of any Government to abandon the requirement could at best be a very bad omen and certainly does no credit to the proponents as its abandonment can only facilitate fraud, and will not be electorally popular.
