To whom it may concern,

Please do not revert to the corruptible system where people do not need identification to vote.

I have volunteered at electoral booths and as a scrutineer for some years. The recent state election, which required voter identification, was a step in the right direction and the measure was widely supported by those I spoke with.

It is only reasonable that, for the most weighty act of any citizen – voting for our government – there should be some formal identification required to show that the person is entitled to vote, and is not voting fraudulently.

Yours faithfully,

David van Gend
