Dear Sir / Madam,

RE: Electoral and Other Legislation Amendment Bill 2015

For the electoral system to have credibility it is important that voters are able to provide proof of identity.

I do not understand why the current minority ALP Government would remove this requirement. It is very difficult not to suspect that there is some ulterior motive.

The provision of ID is essential in so many areas of State and National life; why not for the most fundamental activity of voting in State and Federal elections.

Please retain the requirement for voters to provide some form of ID in order to vote. A driver's license is the most obvious, but there are others that could readily be provided.

Yours sincerely - Ian McIver
