While considering the Amendment Bill, please keep in mind the inconvenience to the general public if being asked for more identification than usual and the longer time it would result in it taking to vote.

Also, please consider the inability of some members of our society to provide particular documents - it would be very unfair to exclude people from having their vote on the basis of not having a particular form of identification. This is especially true when the government has the ability to penalise people for not voting, and would be very inconsistent.

Sincerely,

Bronwyn Logan
